Summary: Aamer makes a strong point that there is no such thing as racism without all of the historical context. He argues that one cannot be a "reverse racist" against white people, because for this to be true one would need to go back in time and change history. Racism is completely linked to the context of systemic oppression.

Pick someone you could share this clip with and send it to them. Sometimes, a person might be more likely to have their minds opened by an argument made through humor or more willing to watch a short video clip than a long academic article.
